Victims have always existed, but until now they have been invisible because they were considered as the compulsory toll of the march of history. Now they have become visible and that means that they do not accept their situation as something natural or inevitable, but as an injustice for which an answer is expected. Behind all victimization is an instrumental logic that reduces everything to which it is applied to a mere means to an end, to a mere material of domination or annihilation. Many of the forms of victimization are founded on and justified as a means to achieve social, political or economic objectives, which in reality end up absolutizing the pure instrumentality which harbours in victimization. A reconciled future can only occur by breaking the instrumental logic which is at the basis of victimization. This forces us to rethink justice from the perspective of a remembrance of the victims which saves them from a second death, that of being considered as the “necessary price”.

This conference aims at critically analyzing the instrumental logic of victimization in different spheres:

1. Victims of terrorism and overcoming violence
2. Political violence and victimization
3. Speed and sacrificial logic
